Patient Information Handout

Ultrasound

Ultrasound is a technique using sound waves reflected back from tissues in the body to create an image. The sound waves are of high frequency by a transducer placed upon the skin, a clear gel is used between the skin and transducer to help sound transmission.

There is no radiation involved, and there are no known harmful effects. Ultrasound is especially used in obstetrics and gynaecology, to assess soft tissues such as muscles and tendons and investigation of the abdominal organs, amongst other things.
